A: I don't think that is a simple question to answer, since it is directed to several technologies. You have a few valid options. But none of them will be easy to do. I have done a video on how to do this for DS3, for example. If this is for a product that is not available anymore, or that someone else has the project, I would recommend going to the manufacturer's support site. They are going to be the ones to know all the ins-and-outs of the technology (and know if it is possible to get it working). If the product is still made, and still exists in the world, I would recommend contacting the author of the product, as they would know how to get it to work and/or correct. If you want to ask them, but do not want to contact them directly, you can ask if they have been contacted already. A: Use a PC Mag review. They have instructions how to get a HDV, DV or DVX camcorder to work with Photoshop. Factors affecting quality of life in patients with hematologic diseases. Factors associated with physical and mental health-related quality of life were examined in a sample of 756 patients with hematologic diseases (baseline visit to a cancer center) from the National Cancer Institute of Canada Clinical Trials Group Phase III trial, Canadian Cancer Trials Group 0226. Data were analyzed using multiple regression, controlling for important covariates such as baseline symptom severity. Results suggest that at baseline, patients with a better overall health status tended to have higher quality of life (QOL) scores for both physical and mental health. In addition, on-study changes in health status, changes in disease and treatment information, and demographic characteristics were also associated with changes in QOL over time. These findings suggest that the identification of patients at risk for poor QOL may be enhanced by the assessment of variables including patients' health status, disease and treatment information, and demographic characteristics.
