Joaquín "El Chapo" Guzmán — the Mexican drug lord wanted by the U.S. for allegedly running a multimillion-dollar drug-trafficking operation — is allegedly responsible for selling at least 141 metric tons of cocaine since his arrival in Mexico, according to a new report. 'El Chapo,' who stands accused of overseeing a brutal drug cartel in Sinaloa, Mexico, has escaped from prison numerous times since he was first arrested in 1993 and has been on the lam ever since. During his most recent incarceration, the self-proclaimed drug lord escaped from the Altiplano maximum-security prison in northwestern Mexico by hiding in a laundry cart on June 19. Since then, the 66-year-old has been on the lam, and The Washington Post notes he's hiding out at the luxurious Los Cabos resort area — which is just miles from where he most recently escaped from prison. He escaped from prison in a laundry cart on June 19, and has remained on the run ever since. One reason why authorities believe El Chapo is able to stay on the run is because the Mexican navy recently ramped up security around the area. El Chapo will reportedly face extradition to the U.S. to face charges of trafficking tons of drugs as well as having been responsible for the murder of at least 14 people.
