Death Fang - Thy Kingdom Come (1995) [Import] A.N. Trofimov, G.N. Smirnov. The music of metal is characterized by a large number of harsh power chords (guitar chords). Multiple power chords sound simultaneously in some songs of heavy metal, which creates a continuous drone with a single chord. Czechoslovakian orchestras were especially famous for their use of huge orchestras; indeed, in the 1970s, Czechoslovakian heavy metal bands included between 80 and 85 musicians, of which ten instruments including a Turkish zurna, a Russian slez, a Chinese cymbal, a range of Tibetan percussion instruments, a Hungarian bass gong, a Czech trombone, a Czech trumpet and a French tuba. Although they were initially labeled as the defenders of the communist system, heavy metal was viewed unfavorably in the Soviet bloc in the late 1980s and 1990s, at which point bands like Devildriver were specifically banned. Kata Cherepany, formerly of the Soviet rock band Kordon, said the band's music was "like a world where everything is black and gloomy with a hint of red... Occasionally, an echo of the Soviet soundtrack would be heard in Heavy Metal, where artists were free to incorporate only existing Soviet music into their work. The first such case was in, where the Czech band Střeloucy used pieces from the soundtrack to Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. But artists were less free in The Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia on August 20, what has become known as August 20, as there were no more music magazines to publish information about banned music. Many heavy metal songs from the "lost" era of the 1980s would appear on various post-communist Czech heavy metal compilations, including, and the late Roky Tomasin who as a member of Dev 648931e174
