If you are not accessing The Pirate Bay through the Tor network, are you sure you are not being traced? Do you know who your isp is or maybe you have been known to exceed certain upload and download limits? I would say that torrents are by far the most efficient way of storing, distributing, and using information. If you run a torrent tracker, you won't get rich, but you might earn enough to support your family. If you are not accessing The Pirate Bay through the Tor network, are you sure you are not being traced? Do you know who your isp is or maybe you have been known to exceed certain upload and download limits? I would say that torrents are by far the most efficient way of storing, distributing, and using information. If you run a torrent tracker, you won't get rich, but you might earn enough to support your family. So you think it is possible to make a living from being a torrent tracker? Yes, a tracker has almost no overhead, so you could earn lots of money. However, it is possible to make a living through companies that actually help "pirates" or maintain torrent sites. For example, my company, Kazaa, offers an online service that will allow people to upload and share files without opening their own "trackers". Even if we do not make any money from the service, it is still profitable to Kazaa because we do not have to pay the ISPs for bandwidth and we provide an extremely useful service. I would say that torrents are by far the most efficient way of storing, distributing, and using information. If you run a torrent tracker, you won't get rich, but you might earn enough to support your family. On the other hand, torrents make pirating too easy. Most people will use it, however, torrents are not a viable way to distribute files or share music, both of which are the main use of the torrent format. If more people who want to distribute files share them in a way other than a torrent, it is likely that the torrents will become obsolete. In my personal opinion, I don't think that can ever be as easy to download or distribute files as it is now with torrents. Let's say if a single file was distributed by the millions through torrents and by the hundreds, but not by the millions, if that were to happen, which would be more likely? I imagine
