This article series will attempt to track the wider set of trends to determine which are real Renaissances and which are fads that will likely have no lasting impact. The first trend to be discussed in this series is 3D printing, which used to be the hype of the technology for the tech bloggers, but is now a real mainstream technology. We will see how 3D printing is actually picked up by the mainstream world, and how it will most likely play a role in future new products. The second trend is the IoT. As more and more of the things around us are connected to the Internet, we will see how the tech world starts to embrace this trend in a way that should worry a few people. Our guess is that the Internet of Things will soon be a key part of our everyday lives, not just an idea from science fiction and of course, some sectors
